Were good labour and manure bestowed upon the trees the colour and taste of the leaves would be perfect, and the plantation would successfully flourish. When such is done, we have no doubt the tea trade will be in the ascendant. If no measure he taken, so as to make some change in the trade, we are afraid that all the finest tea will become coarser, and its price lower; and in such case, it will not only be difficult for the merchants to make any profit, but the tea growers will also find difficulty in amassing wealth. Consequently we take the trouble to lay the above detailed circum traces before those concerned in the trade for their consideration, with a request that they will use their best endeavour to comply with the spirit of the times (lit. the proper management of the Patrick Coin, seamon, was fined a similar trade). Having a knowledge of the evil arising from the present state of things, they must plainly see that if proper measures be taken; the price for the best tea will be daily increased > fully attained. Compliance with the above request is the ardent hope of the Foreign Tea Mebchants. The following is the mode suggested for planting too and picking the leaves.

The plan adopted by the tea growers in the Kwangtung province is to plentifully manure the trees with bean cake every year. On a plantslabour and manuro was spent, and before using manure, the old earth was carried away and replace by new earth. The trees, of course, produce sturdy branches and leaves, the colour and taste of which will be perfect; in which case, they will be considered just as good as those of India, and on their arrival in London they will fatch higher prices, and the merchants and growers will be much benefited. Consequently it is to out of his purse. He was chased into a shop be hoped that the many growers will adopt this mode (of cultivation).

As to the mode of picking. It is requested that the picking of the leaves will be promptly mede according to the time, and that the growers will by no means allow the time to pass without picking them. At the present moment, tea leaves in the Fuhkien province are usually picked after a lapse of three or four days beyond the proper time. This practice has an insurious effect, as the leaves cannot stand the temperature, hence the finest leaves become coarser, and those who wish their tea trees to produce the importance. At the time of picking, it is proper for you to divide the leaves int ) first, caroud, and middling qualities; when this is done, they, should be placed in separate baskets so that the same should not be mixed up. We are informed that this was the practice in former dines, and now why cannot they be stored in separate places? The leaves must be sieved several times, after which they should be divided into first, second, and middling qualities. Sieving will not injure the fine quality leaves herefore, we hope that the growers will at the time of picking stere the same in different places. Dated the suspicious day of the Winter moon in the 10th year of the reign of Kwang Su

"MAYTIME IN MIDWINTER." The world, what is it to you, dear, And mo, if its face be grey, And the new-born year be a shrawd year For flowers that the floree winds fray?

You smile, and the sky scems blue, dear; You laugh, and the month turns May. Your hands through the booksholves flutter Scott, Shakespeare, Dickens, are caught Blake's visions, that lighten and matter:

Molière and his smile has nought Loft on it of sorrow, to after The secret things of his thought. No grim thing written or graven, But grows, if you gaze on it, bright; A lark's note rings from the raven, And tragedy's robe turns white; And shipwrooks drift into havon;

And darkness laughs, and is light. Grief seems but a vision of madness; Life's key-note peals from above With nought in it more of sadness Than broads on the heart of a days: At sight of you, thought grows gladness, And life, through love of you love." A. SWINBURNE

QUEER STORIES. A LOST LETTER.

Even prim old Mr. Parcament, the lawy nccumbed to the enervating influence of the tropical weather, and could not resist the temptation of discarding his coat and waistcoat while at work in his private room. To be sure, it was the Long Vacation, and nearly all his clients were out of town; but be was constantly apprehensive of being discovered in a state of deshabille, and would -not-have-allowed-a client-to-see-him-without a pecktie for the world. One particularly hot day, when the atmosphere seemed almost suffocating, there came a knock at his door, and as the handle was being turned from the outside he was startled by the sound of a woman's voice and the rustle of a silk gown. Could it be possible that a lady was being ushered in by one of his clerks without any previous warning? Mr. Parchment was perfectly aghast at such impropriety, especially considering the very unprofessional state of his attire. It was evident, however, that this was not a false alarm, and a moment's hesitation would have been fatal. Fortunately, close at hand was a baize screen, concealing a toilet apparatus, and behind this Mr. Parchment rushed with breathless tropidation, just as a clerk, followed by a lady, entered the apartment.

murmured the clerk, after a pause, apparently greatly relieved, having no doubt realised his indiscretion. "I thought you said be was within," said the lady, sharply. "He was a moment ago," blundered the

"Mr. Parchment must have gone out,"

"Then I will wait here," said the lady seating berself in the clients chair. "Perhaps you had better take a seat outside, ma'am," suggested the clerk. "I can remain here," said the lady quietly as she took up the newspaper. The clerk lingered a moment, evidently overawed by the lady's manner, and ill at ease in his mind, and then slowly disappeared; while Mr. Parchment, behind the screen, gnashed his false teeth with rage. He altogether failed to realise the ludicrous side of the situation, and was conscious only of mingled discomfiture and humiliation. It was out of the question that he should confront the lady in his present state, minus his coat and waistcoat, collarless and cuffless. The alternative was to remain in his hidingplace till the visitor's patience was exhausted. although this involved the risk of detection, which would only add to his embarrassment.

To make matters worse, the visitor was the last person in the world he wished to see at any time. She was the wife of Sir Hector family affairs Mr. Parchment had managed of her husband's behaviour, and was not Sir Hector. for years. Unfortunately, proceedings for particular about hurting the feelings of his a separation, and even for a divorce, were legal advisor. pending between Sir Hector and Lady Banof the unpleasantness. Matrimonial controversy was a branch of his business which Mr. Parchment particularly distiked, being a highly-respectable, straitlaced old practitioner; and he had neither tact nor conhad been worried to death over the unhappy esteem for either of the parties, he would have been delighted to wash his hands of it. He particularly dreaded tete-à-tête interviews with Lady Bunnister, for she was a violenttempered woman of vulgar origin, and Mr. -Parchment-found it necessary to stand very much on his dignity with her. This made it all the more impossible for him to present himself looking as though be were stripped for a bout of fisticusts, and his natural primness and old-bachelor modesty caused him to feel more nervous and embarrassed every moment.

After a short pause, Lady Bannister threw aside the newspaper impatiently, and rose to her feet. Mr. Parchment shuddered at the action, for if she should stroll up to the window, he would inevitably be discovered To his great relief, however, Lady Bannister walked towards the fireplace, no doubt to arrange her bonnet-strings before the looking glass over the mantelshelf. But, ere the lawyer had recovered from his first fright, he was seized with a fresh paroxyem of dismay as he remembered that upon his desk there lay open a letter he had received that morning from the lady's husband. Lady as he took his seat in the cab again, after Bannister could hardly fail to perceive it if telling the man to drive to Sir Hector's club. she cast her eves in that direction, and she received such particular instructions to conceal from her—namely, her husband's present address.
